IACMR CONFERENCE PRESENTATION PAPER

Jun. 2017

- http://iacmr.cnjournals.com/en/ch/index.aspx?parent_id=20170915032310239&meeting_id=IACMR2018
- Abstract: Based on similarity-attraction paradigm and social identity theory, this article investigated the relationship between relational demography and subordinates' voice behavior, and the mediating effect of voice self-efficacy and voice psychological safety.
- The empirical results showed that
 1. The similarity between supervisors and subordinates in age and professional tenure both positively predict subordinates' voice behavior (promoting voice and prohibitive voice).
 2. The similarity in age and professional tenure have significant positive effects on subordinates' voice self-efficacy and psychological safety.
 3. Both voice self-efficacy and psychological safety mediate the relationship between the similarity of age, professional tenure and promoting voice, and voice self-efficacy plays a mediating role in the relationship between the similarity of age, professional tenure and prohibitive voice.
